BULGARIA WAS ONLY NAZI PUPPET REGIME WHICH REFUSED TO SURRENDER JEWS TO HITLER, GAVE SUPPORT TO KING IN SAVING THEM BY REMOVAL FROM SOFIA TO VILLAGES WHILE NAZI CATASTROPHE SWEPT ON THROUGH EUROPE

It was brought out at the Eichmann trial in Jerusalem that Bulgaria, alone among the Nazi puppet regimes refused to surrender Jews to Hitler. King Boris, according to documents, saved Sofia Jews from deportation by forcing them to move to villages where their presence would be unnoticed by the Germans, reports the New York Times. One Nazi report complained that "the Bulgarian Government openly supports the King."

The almost complete extermination of the Jewish community in Salonika, Greece, was narrated at the trial. A survivor of the 1,000-mile rail journey from Greece to the death camp of Auschwitz, Poland, testified that, of 56,000 Jews shipped to Auschwitz, Treblinka, and Lublin, only 1950 came back.

The witness, Itzhak Nehama, recalled that the Jews of Salonika were already living skeletons when the deportations began in March, 1943. He testified that many died during the seven-to-nine-day journey to the camps. Those who survived the trip in boxcars were in no condition for forced labor and were sent quickly to the gas chambers, he said.

Spotted typhus raged in the Salonika ghettos, but Eichmann insisted that the deportations should be "total and immediate," said Yaacov Baror, assistant prosecutor. Mr. Baror backed this statement with an affidavit submitted at the Nuremberg war crimes trials by Dieter Wisliceny, Eichmann's deputy in Greece.

Wisliceny, who was hanged as a war criminal in Czechoslovakia in 1948, swore that he had informed Eichmann that spotted typhus was prevalent in the Jewish districts of Salonika and that there was a high rate of tuberculosis. But Eichmann replied by telegram, his deputy said, that the "resettlement" should proceed at all cost.

Another document told of the deportation to the gas chambers at Auschwitz of the entire Jewish population of the Greek island of Rhodes, says the New York Times. The document consisted of a Nuremberg affidavit by a German Army private, Erwin Lenz.

Private Lenz, described as "anti-Nazi" by the prosecution, said he had seen the 1,200 Jews of Rhodes embarked in some old boats for the Greek mainland, the first stage of their two thousand-mile journey to be killed. This was in August, 1944, when disaster threatened Germany on every front. Yet the death march was undertaken on orders from Eichmann's office, the prosecution maintained.

Dr. Robert Servatius, Eichmann's defense counsel, said he wanted the right to cross-examine Private Lenz if the former soldier could be found. Mr. Baror said he would not mind if Lenz testified in Israel, since he was anti-Nazi.

But Dr. Servatius, who has complained that eight of the ten witnesses he would like brought to Israel have been effectively barred by the threat of arrest as former Nazis, was not eager to have Lenz appear. He said it would be all right to have him examined in West German court.

Itzhak Nehama was a Salonika Jew who now lives in Israel. He recognized himself in a snapshot of Greek Jews being beaten by Nazis in the main square of Salonika on July 11, 1942. When Jews between 18 and 45 years of age were ordered to assemble in the square, about 9,000 obeyed, he said, reports the New York Times.

"I was wearing my best," Mr. Nehama related. "Right away, blows were showered on us before I even knew what was going on. Some were beaten so badly they fainted. Then the S. S. men would pour buckets of water on them and resume the beatings when the victims revived.

"Some of us were ordered to stand in line rigidly for hours in the hot sun. If anyone budged, blows were showered on him. Others were made to perform calisthenics. This is a picture of me doing knee bends. You should have seen me at about 2:30 that afternoon. I was unconscious from beatings and bedridden for two weeks."

It was not explained how the pictures had come into the possession of the prosecution. But Mr. Nehama surmised that they had been taken by German girls who were observing the scene from a near-by balcony. He said the girls goaded the Nazis on to greater cruelties.

Dr. Servatius made no objection to photos of the beatings. But he said the Germans in uniform were not S. S. men but ordinary soldiers and others whose attire he said he could not recognize.

The witness said he was quarantined for forty-two days in the Salonika ghetto during a typhus outbreak and then shipped to Auschwitz with a transport of 2,700 Jews. Only ten of this trainload survived the war, he said.

Itzhak Nehama recalled some of the ruses used by Germans to lull Salonika Jews into peaceful acquiescence of deportation to Poland. The Nazis, he said, told the Jews they were going to live and work in their own communities "just like in Palestine."

In fact, Mr. Nehama said, the Jews were encouraged to take warm clothing and other personal effects. He even carried an umbrella, he recalled, says the New York Times. Thus, he said, it was quite a shock when, after a week in the crowded boxcars, Mr. Nehama and the others staggered out at Auschwitz and saw doomed Jews wandering about in flimsy striped uniforms.

The witness said that he had tried to ask some French Jews what was going on at Auschwitz but that they told him to be silent. He would find out soon enough, he said he was told.

Adolf Eichmann told an International Red Cross official a month before the end of World War II that he disapproved of some of the measures of comparative leniency that Heinrich Himmler intended to introduce toward Jews.

A report by the official, Paul Dunand, a Swiss, was submitted by the prosecution at the trial of Eichmann, who is charged with having played a leading role in the slaughter of millions of Jews during the war. Mr. Dunand described how Eichmann took him on a guided tour April 6, 1945, of Theresienstadt, a "model" ghetto near Prague. The end of the war loomed and Dunand feared that the Nazis might be plotting last-minute mass executions.

Eichmann, he said, insisted that the Jews in Theresienstadt were better off than many Germans. Eichmann explained that Himmler's purpose in creating the ghetto was to give Jews "a sense of racial community through the sense of almost complete autonomy."

Afterwards they were to be transported to some region where they would live in isolation from the German population, Eichmann said. He did not approve of all Himmler's measures, the report said, but "as a good soldier" he obeyed orders.

Eichmann promised that no more Jews would be deported to death camps, Dunand said, reports the New York Times. After the report had been admitted, the prosecution summoned a witness who said he was put to work building gas chambers near Theresienstadt in February, 1945.

The witness, Adolf Engelstein, a Czech-born engineer now living in Israel, said he had been assigned by the Nazis to alterations on an eighteenth-century fortress near Theresienstadt.

"Our orders were to hermetically seal snipers' holes in the walls of the buildings," the witness said. "I was told it would be a warehouse to store vegetables but I could not believe this.

"Another engineer brought to me doors on which the inscription, 'gas tight' was stenciled," he continued. "It was clear to us that the doors were to be fitted to gas chambers."

Mr. Engelstein said he had feigned illness and was allowed to return to Theresienstadt. He found the ghetto apprehensive over a rumor that everyone was to be sent to the gas chambers.

The Nazi commandant told the people to relax and then, according to Mr. Engelstein, spent half an hour beating up the chief technician of the ghetto, whom he accused of having started the rumor. A few days later alterations at the fortress were discontinued, the witness said.

Another witness, Vitezsav Diamant, said he was present at Theresienstadt when Eichmann presided at a "selection" of inmates for transportation to the gas chambers at Auschwitz. But Mr. Diamant, an electrician, was unable to identify Eichmann in the glass cage of the prisoner's box. The sallow prisoner enjoyed a derisive chuckle when his defense counsel, Dr. Robert Servatius, apparently trapped Mr. Diamant during cross-examination. Mr. Diamant had testified that the big selection at Theresienstadt, involving 35,000 Jews, occurred in the autumn of 1944 over a period of several days.

Dr. Servatius inquired whether Eichmann was present throughout the selections. When Mr. Diamant said he did not know, the defense counsel swung dramatically around and asked, "would you stick to your testimony if I tell you that Eichmann was at that time in Hungary?"

There was laughter when Mr. Diamant replied: "After all, Eichmann did not introduce himself to me. I was only told by others he was there." The presiding judge, Moshe Landau, rapped for order and said, "This commotion in court sometimes makes me despair!"

"I have no more questions," said Dr. Servatius. He had scored a point. The prosecution itself maintains that Eichmann was in Hungary during the fall in question concerning himself with the so-called "death march" of Hungarian Jews from Budapest to the Austrian frontier.

A callous message Eichmann is alleged to have sent to Franz Rademacher, a Jewish-affairs expert of the German Foreign Ministry, in September, 1941, concerned the fate of 8,000 Jews in Yugoslavia. After a telephone conversation with Eichmann, Rademacher pencilled a note: "Eichmann proposes shooting."

Rademacher made an affidavit in 1948 in which he said: "I remember exactly. * * * Eichmann said the army was responsible for maintaining order in Serbia and must therefore shoot the rebelling Jews. When I repeated the question (of what to do with Belgrade Jews) he simply said, 'Shoot' and hung up." Rademacher was tried by a German court and sentenced to twenty-eight months' imprisonment, but he escaped and his whereabouts is unknown, says the New York Times.

Eichmann's self-portrayal as "a small sausage" was contradicted by several documents, says the New York Times. Dunand reported that Eichmann had described himself as "the direct plenipotentiary" of Himmler "for all Jewish questions."

Rademacher's affidavit said: "Competence for the German Jewish policy in Europe was, according to a Feuhrer decree, solely with the Eichmann division" of security headquarters.

An affidavit by Dr. Siegfried Seidl, one-time commander of the Theresienstadt Ghetto, said Eichmann ordered the execution of all Jews found smuggling mail into the camp. Sixteen prisoners were hanged for this offense on Eichmann's instruction, said Seidl. He himself was hanged in Soviet sector of Vienna after trial by an Austrian court in 1945.

Mr. Engelstein testified that he was one of 200 Jews from Theresienstadt taken earlier to the Forest of Zossen, fifty miles southeast of Berlin, to work on what purported to be a "retreat" for the security headquarters.

He said he was still employed on this subterranean structure when the approach of the Soviet Army interrupted work. While en route to Theresienstadt with an escort of the elite guard, the Jewish workers encountered German troops moving north. The witness recalled that the German soldiers taunted the escort, calling them "Jew-hunters."

An instance of the medical care in Theresienstadt was submitted by the prosecution in the form of a circular letter announcing that

U.S. Hadassah Head Wants All Zionists To Unite For World Work

The head of Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America, called on all Zionist groups to unite in implementing programs to benefit Jews throughout the world. Mrs. Siegfried Kramarsky, president of Hadassah, said a strengthened Zionist movement was necessary to "fortify Jewish life" and assist in the development of Israel, says the New York Times.

She spoke at Hadassah's annual three-day conference, at Hadassah House, 65 East Fifty-second Street, in New York.

Hadassah has more than 318,000 members in the U.S. and Puerto Rico. It maintains a network of medical, vocational, and child welfare services in Israel at an annual cost of more than $9,000,000. Hadassah is the largest individual Zionist group within the framework of the World Zionist Organization.

In calling for "imaginative and practical means for making the relationship between Israel and Jews outside of Israel significant and creative," Mrs. Kramarsky proposed the following program:

Assistance to Jewish youth in the Diaspora (Jewish communities outside Israel) to understand their heritage; assistance to those who seek "personal fulfillment through aliyah (emigration to Israel) to achieve this objective." Intensifying Jewish education to

Sociologist Warns Orthodox Prepare Least For New Locations

An American sociologist said recently that the Orthodox Jewish movement would suffer serious reverses unless it established a long-range planning to assure its development in new communities. Dr. Marshall Sklare, an expert on population trends, and director of the division of scientific research of the American Jewish Committee, said that Orthodox Judaism had lagged in meeting the challenge of "tremendous population movements to new communities" in the last fifteen years.

He took part in a symposium on this theme, says the New York Times, at a convention of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, in Atlantic City, N. J. The Union represents 2,500 affiliated Orthodox congregations in the U.S. and Canada. One thousand delegates were present.

Dr. Sklare told the symposium that neither the Reform, Conservative, nor Orthodox branches of Judaism had planned sufficiently for the "geographical dynamism of the Jewish population," adding that Orthodox Judaism "has done probably the least such planning."

The sociologist pointed out that from one-third to one-half of all American Jewish families were now living in places "other than those at which they were living at the end of World War II." He said groups of new Jewish resiinclude the study of Hebrew and the Bible as well as modern Jewish history.

U.S. HADASSAH HEAD

Mrs. Kramarsky said that "as Zionism is vital to a dynamic Jewish life in the Diaspora, so is a dynamic Diaspora vital to Israel", says the New York Times. She continued: "Let us make no mistake about this; the future of Zionism — for the benefit of Jewish life in the Diaspora and for the benefit of Israel — lies in our ability to fulfill our responsibilities as Zionists."

Mrs. Samuel W. Halprin, a former Hadassah president, and now acting chairman of the American Section of the Jewish Agency, Inc., said emigration to Israel had always been a "major part of the Zionist program and the concept of a Jewish national home." While mass migration from the United States is not envisioned, she said, migration "freely undertaken for positive reasons" will be stimulated.

"Today's world is being built upon movement of men, capital, and skills. Unless American know-how is shared with the newly emerging nations, their march to freedom will be delayed."

Mrs. Herman Shulman, chairman of Hadassah's Zionist Affairs Committee, said the "two indispensable tasks of the Zionist movement must be the deepening of Jewish education and the stimulation of immigration into Israel, including representation from the "free world."

Dr. Miriam K. Freund, former president, chairman of the executive committee of the American Zionist Council, says the New York Times, outlined the Council's program, designed to stimulate Zionist activity in America "and to foster a better understanding of Zionism on the part of all Americans."

MONTREAL MEETINGS

● MIZRACHI WOMEN ●

Organization closing dinner, on June 5, at Young Israel Synagogue, will have Rabbanit Sarah Herzog, of Israel, as the guest of honor. Chairman of the dinner will be Mrs. J. J. Eltes, Montreal Council president; dinner conveners: Mrs. N. Harris, Mrs. M. Nathanson. Speakers will be: Rabbanit Herzog, and Pinhas Eliav, Consul General of Israel. An original musical playlet prepared by Mesdames Arthur Garmaise, Dov Israeli, Seymour Silverberg, will be performed by them. Rabbanit Herzog, widow of the late Chief Rabbi of Israel, and mother of the present Israeli Ambassador to Canada, is the president of the World Mizrachi Women's Organization. The Rabbanit (Hebrew word meaning the wife of a Rabbi), and her late husband travelled widely over a period of many years and she has continued to work in many lands in the interests of Israel and its newcomers. Mrs. Herzog speaks seven languages, including English with a trace of Scotch and Irish brogue. She and her late husband lived for years in Ireland where he was Chief Rabbi. The World Mizrachi Women's Organization, of which the Mizrachi Women's Organization of Canada is part, supports vocational schools, kindergartens, social centers in Israel, in the spirit of traditional Judaism. The Girls' Vocational High School in Beersheba, and the Youth Center at Bat Yam are the two most recent projects.

● KEREN HATARBUT ●

At the closing session of a three-day conference of the Western Region, a call was issued to the Zionist Organization of Canada to create a separate fund for formal Hebrew education, to be administered jointly by the Z.O.C. and the Keren Hatarbut. Read by J. Putter, the main resolution stressed the "inadequate financial structure" of formal Hebrew education, and noted the World Zionist Congress action in recommending Hebrew study "as a prime Zionist commitment". Other resolutions committed the organization to: continue bringing Israeli teachers to Canada; call upon Western Canadian communities to support the J. Wolinsky Collegiate (Winnipeg's Hebrew Day High School) to serve all communities of this region; urge Western communities to provide scholarships for Winnipeg's Hebrew Camp Massad; to convene annual meetings of school administrators and to hold biennial workshops for teachers. There were four workshops for educators. It was decided to establish a monthly pedagogic bulletin for the Western Region, with Zvi Barulfan, of Shaarey Zedek Religious School staff as chairman. The sessions showed a demand for a single salary scale for Hebrew teachers in all Western communities, and for a national association of Hebrew teachers across Canada to be developed. S. J. Drache, Q. C., Zionist Organization national vice-president, told a packed conference audience at Rosh Pina Synagogue that the Zionist Organization is exploring ways and means of serving the cause of Hebrew schooling. Noting progress achieved since the last Western Regional Conference had been held at Regina in 1957, the national director, Rabbi Aron Horowitz, of Montreal, said that raiding of school staffs in the region had been ended; teacher certification, and training at summer seminars of the Keren Hatarbut had helped raise the level of education in Schools in the Region; and that the demand for development of a full Hebrew Day High School had borne fruit in the form of the J. Wolinsky Collegiate at Winnipeg. Conference members were told that Keren Hatarbut had brought 32 Israeli teachers to Canada, 19 of whom had been assigned to Western Canadian schools where 15 were still teaching. Six Winnipeg teachers had studied at the summer seminars for teachers, and nine scholarships at the national Leadership Training Institute had been assigned during recent years to students at the Winnipeg Talmud Torah. Adina Freedman, Talmud Torah student, was chosen as this year's winner. Presentations were also made to Y. Panar, of Edmonton; S. Reider, D. Karnat, of Calgary. Scholarships to grade eleven students at the Collegiate, as contributors towards costs of their summer Keren Hatarbut tour of Israel, went to: Sharon Putter, Sarah Lea Altose, David Wiseman, Tamara Lasman, Sylvia Senensky, Sophie Ingberman. Detailed reports on school financing techniques and problems were reviewed at administrator's workshops. Other subjects discussed were: teachers' salary scales, summer camps, Zionist youth movements, Keren Hatarbut youth movement, teacher certification.

SOCIOLOGIST WARNS

Dr. Sklare noted that residents frequently did not know how to plan properly, with the result that the community frequently got "institutions which compete rather than supplement each other." Another problem he saw was that "Jewish newcomers frequently find that business interests have purchased the most desirable sites, leaving sites having serious shortcomings."

He recommended to the Union that it establish immediately a special department to deal with the problem "while the opportunity still remains," says the New York Times. Such a department, he said, would survey new communities; analyze existing facilities for Jewish worship and related activities; and study the patterns of family growth.

He said studies had shown that both those who had no Orthodox ties in their prior residences and those who had no religious attachments tended to seek another attachment because there had not been proper planning to "provide them with an Orthodox choice."

BULGARIA

the camp commander, Maj. Anton Burger, had decreed that "the fathers of all children conceived here, together with the mother and child, will be deported," says the New York Times. The latter warned that all pregnancies must be reported because "abortions must be performed on the orders of the authorities."

Eichmann, who rarely betrays any reaction to events in court, snorted derisively when the spade-bearded assistant prosecutor, Yaacov Baror, portrayed him as a bureaucrat who loved charts and graphs. Mr. Baror made this comment in submitting a booklet prepared by a subordinate of Eichmann concerning the Jews of Bohemia and Moravia, parts of Czechoslovakia annexed by the Nazis.

It was in Prague that Eichmann served his apprenticeship as a mass deporter of Jews. Then a Gestapo captain, he was put in charge of the Central Office for Jewish Emigration in July, 1939, remaining there until 1940, when he moved to Berlin and became head of the main emigration office and the Jewish investigation department of the Gestapo. The two offices were amalgamated as Bureau IV-B-IV of the main security office.

Eichmann's branch office in Prague, managed by his deputy, Hans Guenther, did a thorough job of looting Jewish apartments after the occupants were deported, according to a witness, Ernst Recht.

Mr. Recht a Czech Jew who escaped deportation because he was in an essential business, printing, and because he was married to a Gentile, acknowledged that he had been a confidential aide to Guenther. He said he had been kept in line by repeated threats that he would be shot or sent to a concentration camp if he disobeyed.

Tall and gaunt with dark, sunken eyes, Mr. Recht told the court he had been discharged from a hospital only two hours earlier, says the New York Times. He was spared from lengthy questioning by the judges, one of whom, Benjamin Halevi, can be severely critical when any trace of collaboration is exposed.

FUN WITH FIGURES . . .

If you're a mathematical genius, we need you. If you get regular workouts with your kids' homework, you can help us solve a problem.

We wanted to tell you how many people we'd played for in the last six months. Our drummer naually keeps a check on things like this, but we played some Chinese music once, and he was so busy reading the music he forgot his calculations.

But we do know that we've played for dozens of weddings, quite a few chapter dances, some charity balls, and countless private parties.

We'd like to add to the total by providing the entertainment at your next event — why not call us about it?

Prime Minister Diefenbaker And Premier Ben-Gurion Are Confident Of Eventual Arab-Israeli Peace

Premier David Ben-Gurion of Israel had two days of talks with Prime Minister John Diefenbaker. Before he left, a joint communiqué was issued saying that the two heads of Government had agreed that "an eventual solution to Middle East tensions must envisage the right of all nations in the area to live in peace and security."

The communiqué said that Mr. Ben-Gurion, in outlining his views on the Middle East, noted that particular difficulties for his country had resulted "from the failure to reach a solution of Arab-Israeli differences in accordance with the principles of the United Nations Charter."

The two leaders expressed their confidence that peace ultimately would be achieved between Israel and the Arab states, says the New York Times. They agreed that a relaxation of tension in the Middle East would improve prospects of world peace.

Both Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Ben-Gurion were in accord on the necessity of economic and technical assistance to the under-developed nations, "not only to improve living conditions, but to contribute to the reduction of tension and the development of international confidence and stability."

Economic aid was the main topic of their discussions at their first meeting. The specific problems of Israel in her relations with the Arab world were given priority in their second meeting. The communiqué said that the two leaders, in their discussions of a wide range of international problems, had included the "pressing need for controlled world disarmament."

Premier Ben-Gurion and Prime Minister Diefenbaker expressed confidence that the friendly ties between their two countries would be "further strengthened" by their exchanges of views. Canada has a special interest in Middle Eastern affairs since she has about 850 troops in that area as members of the United Nations truce teams.

Undeterred by a driving rain, Israel's Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion toured the old walled city of Quebec and then flew to continue, for two days, his round of calls on Canadian officials and Jewish community leaders, says the New York Herald Tribune. In Quebec, Mr. Ben-Gurion was met at Ancienne-Lorette Airport by Provincial Premier Jean Lesage for the start of visits to Quebec's Legislature, City Hall, and its Citadel. At the famous old fortress, he reviewed a guard of the Royal 22nd (Van-doos) Regiment and was introduced to Batisse, the Regiment's mascot goat.

A downpour washed out more elaborate ceremonies, and he took the salute in a gatehouse tunnel, remarking, "Some of this rain we could use in Israel."

Mr. Ben-Gurion arrived in Montreal from Quebec City where he had signed the Golden Book at City Hall, visited the Legislature, reviewed a guard of honor at the Citadel, toured the Bois de Coulonge — official residence of Lieut.-Gov. Onesime Gagnon — and spoken to the congregation at Quebec's only Jewish Synagogue, Beth Israel Ohev Sholom.

Prime Minister Diefenbaker said in the House of Commons that Premier David Ben-Gurion, of Israel, made no request for Canadian arms during his visit and conferences in Ottawa. Transport Minister Balcer later announced the Government has agreed to consider exchanging landing rights in Canada and Israel as a result of Premier Ben-Gurion's visit.

The Montreal Gazette reported that Mr. Ben-Gurion said in Montreal: "We did not come here for arms," he said. "We came to discuss the whole field of international relations and Canada's trade relations with Israel. My Trade Minister had talked with your Mr. Hees and he tells me the discussions were favorable."

Mr. Ben-Gurion also called for the World Powers to sign a declaration of their faith in the State of Israel. When asked if he thought that the signature of Russia on such a declaration would aid Israel's cause, he said, "It certainly would." Was it likely that Russia would sign such a declaration in view of its past support of the United Arab Republic? "It is not impossible," he said, with a typical shrug.

Mr. Ben-Gurion said he would stand for election in the Israeli general election due in August, but he would not comment on the possibility of his re-election or defeat. "I'm no prophet." A reporter asked the 74-year-old politician if he thought he was too old to run a young nation. "I know young people I wouldn't trust," Mr. Ben-Gurion replied.

Mr. Ben-Gurion answered questions for almost an hour in the glare of television lights and flashguns. From time to time he shielded his eyes to peer out and capture the questioner with his piercing gaze. When asked about the future of his State in view of the United Arab Republic's attitude that it will never recognize Israel, Mr. Ben-Gurion said, "When a country says 'never,' I don't take it very seriously."

He said that "Canada is an example of how different races can live together in harmony, and I would hope that the world could learn a lesson from the success of your country. I had very instructive talks with Mr. Diefenbaker and we found a common language on all important questions."

Prime Minister Ben-Gurion of Israel, was honored at a reception given at the Windsor Hotel, by Ambassador Yaacov Herzog; and at a civic reception to which about four hundred leading Montreal citizens were invited. Mayor Drapeau presented to him as a souvenir of his visit to Montreal a Bourgault wood carving. The work of the St. Jean-Port Joli, Que., artist symbolizes the importance of agriculture in the life of the province. Mr. Ben-Gurion said Montreal, like Israel, is a true mosaic of many cultures. He spoke in French and in English. Mr. Drapeau welcomed him in both languages and in Hebrew.

The four-day Canadian portion of his journey was a visit of state, only the third official invitation arranged for the Israeli leader in his country's thirteen-year history, reports the New York Herald Tribune. The other two, last year, came from Belgium and the Netherlands.

Before leaving Montreal Mr. Ben-Gurion spoke of the "warmth of the welcome" accorded him by Canada's John G. Diefenbaker and other top Canadian officials.

The reality behind the polite phrase was borne out by informed Canadian figures. There were table-thumping accolades when Mr. Ben-Gurion visited Parliament in Ottawa, crowds and cheers whenever he appeared in public there, in Quebec, and Montreal, and warm exchanges in behind-the-scenes talks. One source close to Mr. Diefenbaker confided, "I've never seen the old man (sixty-five-year-old Diefenbaker) so taken by any one before."

Liberal party leader Lester B. Pearson, who paid a midnight call at Mr. Ben-Gurion's Montreal (Ritz Carlton) hotel room, assessed the Israeli's Canadian trip as a "great triumph" that exceeded all expectations.

Mr. Ben-Gurion had sought to impress on Canadian leaders that Israel is a factor for peace in the Middle East, and tried to acquaint them with the military and political dangers — aggravated by the cold war — facing Israel. At the same time, aids discussed how to improve trade relations between the two countries.

Mr. Ben-Gurion's principal conference after his arrival in New York was a two-hour call on U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammerskjold at the latter's apartment at 73d Street and Park Avenue. Under Secretary Ralph Bunche was present, says the New York Herald Tribune. That the meeting dealt mostly with generalities about world and Middle East affairs was indicated by the fact that Mr. Ben-Gurion's aids prepared no political position papers for the conference.

In a brief formal statement at the airport, Mr. Ben-Gurion spoke of close Israeli-American ties, and said he looked forward to his meeting with President Kennedy. The two met first when Mr. Kennedy, the Massachusetts Congressman, visited Israel in 1951, and again last year when Mr. Ben-Gurion was in Washington. Technically that was a "private" and non-official visit, as was his trip to the United States at this time.

In New York: Premier David Ben-Gurion of Israel hailed the United States for "leadership in the family of freedom." On his return from a four-day visit to Canada, the 74-year-old Premier issued a statement in which he also endorsed the "close ties of friendship" between the American and Israeli people, says the New York Times. The Premier, who arrived in a Canadian military transport plane, said he had had "most interesting and useful talks on international questions" with Prime Minister John Diefenbaker and other Canadian officials.

Also participating in the talks with U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold were Michael Comay, head of Israel's delegation to the United Nations; Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, United Nations Under Secretary; and Col. Haim Ben-David, Premier Ben-Gurion's aide.

Israeli sources said Mr. Ben-Gurion and Mr. Hammarskjold had engaged in "a wide-ranging discussion of the present state of the world," including mention of Africa and Indonesia. Mr. Ben-Gurion stopped at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel during his unofficial visit.

The executive vice-president of the anti-Zionist American Council for Judaism had called on President Kennedy to tell Israeli Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion that the United States would not tolerate any attempt by Israel to impose obligations on American Jews.

In a letter, concerning the President's meeting with Mr. Ben-Gurion, Rabbi Elmer Berger stated: "The Zionist policy pursued by the State of Israel holds all Jews, regardless of their legal citizenship, are part of a body politic called 'the Jewish people,' possessing a system of national rights in and obligations to, a political entity in Palestine known as 'the Jewish national home,' now the State of Israel."

The rabbi called Mr. Ben-Gurion "one of the principal, and perhaps the most articulate, exponents of this policy."

He asked the President "to confront him (Mr. Ben-Gurion) with the impropriety of this policy and inform him of the unqualified sovereignty of the government of the United States over all its nationals, as individual citizens of this country, regardless of their religious faith."

More About Jewish Day Schools

BY DAVID FINESTONE, 4393 DAILY ROAD, MONTREAL

The following was sent as a letter to the Canadian Jewish Review and the Congress Bulletin:

I would like through the pages of your bulletin to dispel some of the fears that Mr. Philip Levy might have created in the minds of some of your readers regarding Jewish day schools, and disprove some of the false and irrational notions he has regarding their existence in our Montreal community.

Assuming that Mr. Levy's percentage figures of attendance in Jewish day schools are correct (which I know to be higher) one cannot logically conclude this as being an indication that the Jewish public regards them with uncertainty and suspicion, one can only conclude that due to the lack of facilities to accommodate a greater number of children, this percentage prevails, the other factor being the enormous cost of upkeep of a Jewish day school.

How can one speak of segregation in the Province of Quebec, knowing that there exist already two school panels, one Protestant and the other Catholic, and that Jewish children are being segregated in the Protestant schools as separate from the Catholic? Why not a Jewish panel under such conditions? I don't know what schools Mr. Levy attended, but I can tell him that both the elementary and high schools I attended under the Protestant School Board had one hundred percent Jewish attendance. Isn't that segregation in itself without the benefits that the Jewish child can gain from the day school?

I agree with Mr. Levy that the Synagogue is a very important institution, but he should know that every Jewish child is a child of God and not only the children of parents attending the Synagogue should get a Jewish education but all Jewish children should.

Contrary to Mr. Levy's opinion, the parochial schools do not create in the Jewish child a special feeling of Jewish nationalism detrimental to his Canadian citizenship but a feeling of pride in his Jewish heritage without any mixed loyalties, which makes him far better prepared to face his future life as a citizen of the country he lives in. A knowledge of one's past and a knowledge of an additional language such as Hebrew can only enrich the life of a Canadian Jewish child and help him to be more tolerant and broad-minded with respect to other people's views and beliefs.

This is no longer a matter for theorizing and debating because there has already been produced a generation of day school graduates who, to say the least, are just as fully integrated in Canadian life as those who attended other schools, and many of whom occupy important positions in the United States and Canada as professional men, academicians, and scientists. I think Mr. Levy has employed some very unorthodox means to make some of his points, by quoting out of context a remark of Label Katz, president of Bnai Brith in the United States. I happen to know Mr. Katz to be a strong believer in the Jewish day schools and I cannot believe that he would refer to them as a source of extravagant nationalism.
